Renato Lancellotta, The Lion and the Leopard.The question had been bugging me for months, so I decided to ask a few of my colleagues from Portland State University. I have received a couple of really thoughtful answers (and even started a debate), so I'm laying out my best guesses about why the 10,000-foot peak in downtown Portland is so, well, screwed. The spike in [emissions] is even more striking when you look at the region-wide trend. While emissions have been trending down for the past two decades, Portland is off to a historically-stubborn start. According to EPA data, Portland recorded the biggest first-quarter emissions increase of any region in the United States in 2008. During the period between Jan. 1 and April 30, average levels of smog-forming ozone hit their highest levels since they were first measured in 1979, according to the American Lung Association.
