In the last five decades, China has experienced unprecedented social and economic changes. In 2014, the GIP has added an additional four new countries to join the list. Developed by the World Bank, The Global Innovation Index (GII) is an annual survey that ranks countries according to their innovation performance. The GIP survey measures innovation at three levels: (1) innovativeness; (2) creativity; and (3) implementation. All data is directly collected from national statistics bureaus, policy institutes, consultancy firms, and standardised research. GIP publishes the results in an annual report, a set of datasets, and various tools including interactive maps. The Global Innovation Index in China 2014 focuses on the competitiveness of China as a global innovation leader. The index examines innovation-creating behaviours and outcomes that are associated with innovative firms and. In addition, the index considers the sustainability of the innovation ecosystem, including access and quality of institutions, enabling environment for entrepreneurs and investors, and innovation ecosystems and policies. This year, the topic of innovation is especially salient due to China's status as the world's largest developing country. The development of the economy and the quality of life of its more than 1.3 billion people is reliant on the capacity of China to become a major innovation leader. To achieve that goal, the GI Index in China 2014 is designed to measure innovation at three dimensions. Specifically, this report focuses on innovativeness, creativity and implementation to provide a comprehensive understanding of innovation capabilities of China. As a result of its innovative focus, this year's report extends the GI methodologies to identify the factors influencing the innovative capability of a country. As a science-based, data-driven initiative, the GI methodology enables the analysis of innovation performance across 78 countries and is built on the premise that the innovation systems of countries are interrelated and mutually reinforcing. This year's report also highlights the importance of micro-level factors such as innovation performance by business sector and industry, science and engineering education, science and technology infrastructure, as well as innovation policies and their effectiveness. The report also highlights the importance of macro-level factors such as the quality of institutions, the innovation ecosystems, the innovation-creating behaviour of the private sector and domestic innovation. All indicators in this report are based on the OECD Better Life Index 2014. The GI analysis is based on a global methodology developed by the World Bank Institute. For more details of the methods employed, please read more about the methodology on the GI website 3da54e8ca3
