Free Screen Video Recorder is a full-featured but lightweight free screen recorder from a developer known for its free conversion software. It can record Skype conversations with no limitations and is therefore useful for Skype meetings and online conference calls. Also, different Windows applications can be singled out and captured as discrete elements. Included is a basic user-friendly image editor that is surprisingly helpful for attaining a polished look. Compared to the other tools we reviewed, Screenr is a better free video creator. Not only does it allow the user to add text, add animations, and add music, but it also allows editing up to 2 tracks of audio and 4 tracks of video, plus it offers some useful features like batch conversion, video recording, frame rate synchronization, and a special timer mode. If you are searching for a screen recorder that can record and save videos up to 4K resolution, VidTab is the way to go. What makes it better than many other free and paid video creation tools is that it allows the user to record only the main window of the application, and it does this with video quality up to 4K. Some users of this screen recorder have even sent me screenshots of videos shot from 4K televisions. While the aforementioned applications allow for basic video recording, Zoom Screen is more suited for instructors who want to create high-quality tutorials and demos for the online learning market. What sets it apart is that the user can edit and optimize the quality of the final output before saving, which is not possible in many other free screen recording tools.
